

The All Well Institute: Developing Leaders for School Health

Date: July 12 - 16, 2002

Location: Camp Allen Retreat Center, Navasota, Texas

Join us at the All Well Institute.

The conference this year will be held at a retreat location in Navasota, Texas.

We will be working toward developing leaders for school health through Learning-Leadership-Action.

The focus of this conference is to create positive, well prepared leaders through systems change for the schools and communities represented. This conference will build leadership skills through:

- A team approach, where each district/community will bring teams of 3, 5, or 7. Upon arrival they will be placed on a larger team with other attending groups.
- Each team will include two trainers who will lead their team through many activities that will not only build positive teamwork but will also build working relationships.
- Participants will learn how to communicate with their school administration, what Senate Bill 19 means to their school, how to advocate for School Health Advisory Councils, and how to implement effective health programming in their district.
- Participants will leave with realistic, well-versed action plans to use next school year.
- Following the conference, teams will have 12 to 15 other participants from across the state they will be able to contact and seek advice from.
- Participants will also be able to have contact with their two trainers, who will be experts in the field of health education.
- The Institute is founded on the belief that investing in the development of advanced leadership skills of key individuals from school systems will result in remarkable improvements in school health programs.
